TRAVEL GAMES TIPS

Travel games are a great way to break up the boredom of a long distance trip. Guessing games, word games, and memory games provide hours of fun and learning. Use this section to help you plan ahead to get even more fun out of your travels!

Portable Fun Pak

Before your trip, gather together a “fun pak”—a set of things that will help you occupy your time while traveling. Choose items that are small and portable. Place them in a backpack or a tote bag.

Skim through the ideas in this book and mark the games you think you'd like to play on your trip. Some games require you to prepare something before your trip. Be sure to include any materials needed for those activities in your fun pak.

What and how much you take will depend on how long you plan to travel. Also, some things that are appropriate for one form of travel may not be ideal for another.

NUMBER GAMES

At the end of their first grade year, children should be able to add and subtract within 100. There are plenty of ways for your child to practice addition while you're on the go—you just need to know where to look!

One Hundred Challenge

This game is great entertainment if you're traveling on the road. Just look out the window and try to spot the numbers from 1 to 100 in order. Look at road signs, addresses, license plates, and other sources for the numbers. If you reach 100 and you still have some distance to travel, you can keep playing the game to see how much higher you can go.

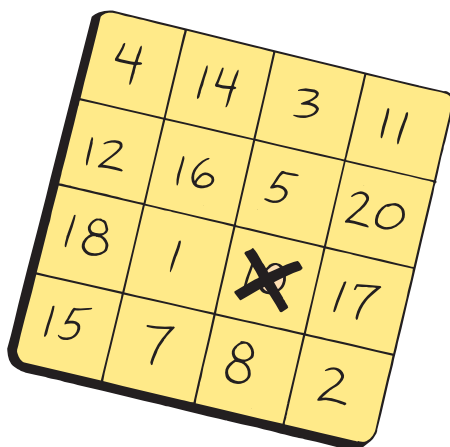

Variation: Begin by spotting 100, then 99, and so on until you reach 1.

Number Lotto

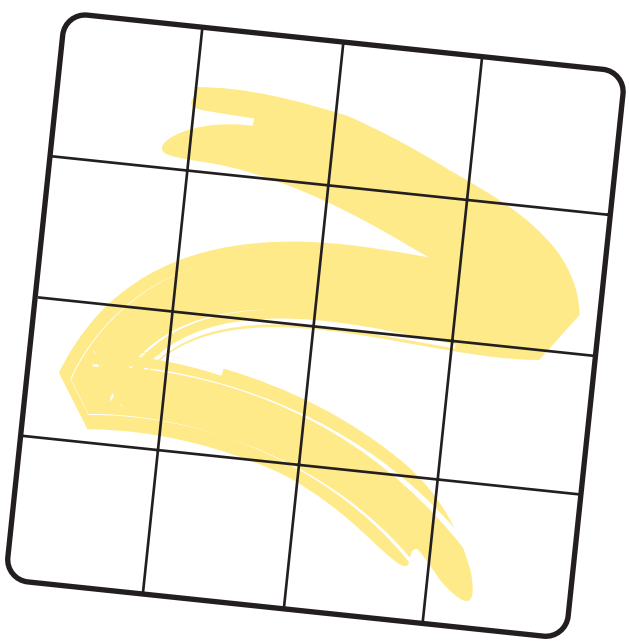

Use the lotto gameboards below and on pages 10–12. Have each player write a number from 0 to 20 in the 16 sections. Next, have everyone try to spot the numbers that are on his or her gameboard. The first person to spot a number calls it out and crosses it off his or her gameboard.

Players who have that same number do not cross it off their gameboards; only the first person to spot the number gets to cross it off. The player who crosses off the most numbers is the winner.
